I am appalled at the inadequacy of the "Proposed Cleanup Plan". Polluters have saved a lot of money and enriched themselves dumping pollutants into the river and soils along it, have created a terrible health hazard for recreational users of the river and wildlife, and cannot walk away from it without paying for their full share of the recovery! Leaving 75-85% of the pollution in the river bottom and banks for "the river to cleanse itself" is an outrageous dereliction of responsibility and unconscionable disregard for health and safety.

How can the "Environmental Protection Agency" condone this? How can you even pass such an inconsiderate plan along for consideration? It makes so little sense that one can only suspect that the polluters are bribing EPA officials to reduce their expense. This is not only poor fulfillment of your mission but bad public relations as well--giving all polluters confidence that they can despoil the environment without having to pay the price.
